When he spoke harshly to the Canaanitish womii, it was but to put her faith to the test, that it might be more signally rewarded. And, on the other hand, neither are the extraordinary means that God sometimes employs, in themselves saving. We have but to refer you to the Jews, who saw the miracles wrought by Christ, who heard him preach, who were witnesses of his power, his eloquence--if I dare apply the term to the gracious words that fell from the Savior--his spotless innocence. What effect did these powerful persuasives produce upon the greater part? Did they not remain as prejudiced and obstinate as before? Need I advert to Judas, who was called as well as the other apostles, and yet remains, perhaps, the only individual of whom we can affirm without any fear of mistake, that he is gone to his own place? I know the turn that some will be ready to give to this subject, but for my own part I am satisfied with the solution of St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Hebrews: The word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard; wherefore let us also fear. We notice, in the second place, that the passage under contemplation affords a striking example of the power of Divine grace. What a contrast is presented between Zaccheus the publican, and Zaccheus the disciple of Jesus! To what are we to Uscribe...
